In 1996, Beautiful/Decay, a black and white micro-zine documenting the marriage of fine art, design, fashion and graffiti was born in a docile American suburb. Since then, B/D hasn't as much burgeoned as it has completely exploded. Now a full-colour, glossy, bi-coastal magazine, B/D enjoys a cult following led by the global hipster police and is generally known as an indie compulsory text. In early 2006, B/D leapt once again, launching their line of artist-designed apparel, marching paper to person. "The line acts as a wearable extension of the artwork found on our pages," says Amir H. Talah, B/D's creative director and founder, who along with partners Ben Osler and Fabz has shepherded over 20 artists to create the label's designs — amongst them, Dust La Rock, James Callahan, Jesse LeDouc, Skwaks, Sam Borkson and Aruro Sandoval. The line to date includes some 40 T-shirts, all of which artfully navigate the waters between hot and arresting. "We feel T-shirts are the perfect medium for creating accessible works of art," Talah explains. The label has recently launched the "AYA KATO+BEAUTIFUL/DECAY" line in collaboration with that amazing Japanese illustrator. These will be available for the holiday season, beginning early November. With vague but sufficiently tingling plans to launch a women's line in the near future, B/D continue to bait our breath, while we plunder and devour their shop online, here: www.andthenexttime.com/beautifuldecay
